I. and IV. rebaked. 1774 £3/3/-
- The note in Vol. I. runs: "Johnson's coarse censure of Lord Chesterfield, 'that he taught the morals of a whore and the manners of a dancing-master' is as unjust as it is harsh. I have always thought the noble author of the letters to his son hardly dealt with by the public, though to public opinion I have the greatest deference. . . . Had his Lordship published these letters as a regular system of education the common objection to their contents would have had unanswerable force: viewing them, however, in their true light, as written privately and confidently by a parent to his child . . . it must surely be confessed there never was a popular exception more unfounded. . . .—J.G."
